

November 16, 2017 (Leaving Home)

We get up around 4 AM and are on our way to the airport by 5:45 AM.

We have no issues checking in for our flight. The flight is full which explains why I wasn't able to select an aisle seat. But I think it's also American Airline's policy to charge extra for the aisle seats.

The flight to Miami is a bit annoying as we listened to the 3 guys in the row behind us talk the entire time. Actually, it was only one guy doing 95% of the talking in the conversation.

When we arrive in Miami, we have over 5 hours until our flight departs for Montevideo, Uruguay. We get supper at a Cuban sitdown restaurant, but the food isn't very good. I ordered the Cuban sandwich in which there was no mustard and hardly any pickles. It was a very bland sandwich. My wife's mahi mahi came with bland mashed potatoes with nothing to put on them. Plus, while we ate, we had to listen to the smartphone of one of the waitresses who was eating at a nearby table while she loudly watched a television program.

them to South America.

My wife's mahi mahi came with bland mashed potatoes with nothing to put on them. Plus, while we ate, we had to listen to the smartphone of one of the waitresses who was eating at a nearby table while she loudly watched a television program.

It's a long wait for our plane. I'm desperate to get on the plane just so I can sit down and try to sleep.

Eventually 9:50 PM comes and boarding begins for our 10:25 PM flight to Montevideo. Once on the plane, it's obvious what American Airlines does with their old planes. They fly